THE BRITISH INTERPLANETARY SOCIETY

The British Interplanetary Society was founded in 1933 to promote the development of interplanetary exploration and communication by the study of rocket engineering, astronomy and other associated sciences. It now includes among its members many British and foreign workers prominent in these fields.

The Society organizes meetings, lectures, exhibitions and film shows. These programmes are planned not only to assist the spread of technical knowledge, but to stress the limitless possibilities of rocket propulsion, and in particular the ultimate implications to human society of the crossing of space.

Full particulars of membership may be obtained from the Secretary. The Secretarial address is 12 Bessborough Gardens, London, S.W.1; telephone TATe Gallery 9371.
